afish,

I'm through with silk line. I'm now using a line that's made from the tears of the poor. Doesn't float very well but it is soooo satisfying to use. Noisy like sharkskin except is a crying sound when it goes through the guides.

I used to be able to fish the tully and see only 20-30 other fisherman. Now there's so many guys standing in the creek, it's raising the water temps!

Sight,

I'll take your word on the crowds. I used to fish the Tully quite a bit, but haven't made a trip there even once this year. When it was stocked with fingerlings the fish and fishing were decent. Now it's just another stocked stream and way too crowded to bother. There are many other streams closer or the same distance for me to fish that are not nearly so crowded, including many that have some wild fish.

If I do make it up there and hear some crying on the stream, I'll know it's either you....or your line. Either way I'll stop by and say hey. 😊
