Franklin, welcome to the board. Your perspective on industrial interaction with the natural environment is very interesting. It sounds like Panama is going through what the USA has been through and continually faces-- a tension between using natural resources for industrial development at the expense of their health and the health of the creatures, including man, who depend upon them. Hopefully, your country manages to curb the degradation before the damage becomes irreparable.

I am certain if your country wishes to send a delegation of fly fishing Ambassadors to Pennsylvania, many of us will take you for some fly fishing outings you won't long forget.

Oh, and the only sandfly I know runs a fly shop in or around Galeton, PA.
