Does it makes you inconsiderate to post about the location?

I say to whom? Other anglers that fish that stream? What if they found it through a website are they not being inconsiderate to me by being there?

The entire argument is ridiculous. What if I told someone via PM. Am i being inconsiderate then, to send another angler to a stream? What if I answered 30 PM's on the subject?

Is it inconsiderate to post about Spring Creek all the time? What about inviting people (any and everyone) to the jam? Is that inconsiderate to the anglers that were going to fish Penns during that time?

What about the PFBC (the ultimate spot burners)? Are they not inconsiderate to put out lists naming every stream in the state with trout (stocked and wild)?

Or is it the other way around.....

Is it inconsiderate to keep good fishing to yourself?

ADJECTIVE:

1. Thoughtless of others; displaying a lack of consideration.
2. Not well considered or carefully thought out; ill-advised.

Thoughtless to others.....well it takes a lot more thought, to want to share joy with people and put a post out there, than keep your mouth shut.

Either way the argument anymore is stupid. I started one thread to say, "hey look the comments about stream X (lord knows I dont want to name it) were way overstated and posting had no effect on the wild fish." And this is what happens. Interesting enough, no one seemed pleased that the fish were ok.
