I'm no biologist, but I'm pretty sure the way its supposed to work is fish that can't spawn in the river run up the tribs to spawn then drop down to live in the river as will the young when they're big enough to survive it.

And, in an ideally unspoilt-by-man world, the biggest would eventually wind up in the ocean and become sea-run, but no matter how hard anyone tries, I'd say salmon runs in the Lehigh aren't gonna work out. :)

On the other hand, if we could somehow get working on that, I'd like to not drive to Pulaski. ;)
