I'm taking the average, and I'd wager that it's more than a few. In my opinion, more than a few is as good as (or as bad as) many in this context. I assert that the average experience of a caught and released trout in temperatures over the generally accepted unfishable range is one that results in a high probability of death.

The moral of the story is that it's tough to justify c&r trout angling in temps over 70ish degrees. It's simply irresponsible. That is undeniable. No rebuttal.
