

Subject: : Gear Talk

Topic: : Looking for a nice reel

Re: Looking for a nice reel

Author: : bikerfish

Date: : 2010/7/7 20:39:20

URL:

my opinion, probably not worth much, but I'm giving it anyways, if you plan on keeping and using it for a while and plan on spending some decent dough on it, get something that's been in production for a while from a well known company. service and parts availability will be great for years to come. orvis, ross, hardy, etc, there are many more. might be a few bucks more and maybe not as flashy, but if you ever have a problem, even 20 years from now, these companies will(hopefully!) be there to help ya out.

the internet is great, do some research on the history of the companies you're looking to buy from.