we have all been to a stream that gets alot of pressure, the fish are "smart" and catching them is tough. did you ever take notice that on some stretches of heavily pressured streams most anglers fish on one side of the stream? all of those presentations usually going one direction. sometimes the fish even hug that bank as to notice anglers walking or standing there. have you ever tried fishing from the opposite shoreline? i have and sometimes it can lead to a very productive day. something to think about and try. good luck all! 🍀
