I spoke with a local who lives in that area, he assures me that its not only got fish, but its got some healthy sized bruisers in there.

I've got some more exploration to do, but I'm pretty satisfied I've found an easy to access, yet low pressured spot with good water. I was wondering about the feasibility of nymphing ala trout through there, and I guess that's the way to go.

Means I should probably tie up some big stones or something, too. Not sure what the hopper I'm going to use is, although I suppose "hopper" might be apropos.

Would swinging a full cast of classic wets also be efficent, here?

Finally, just how big of a hook should I be using? I've noticed that looking up fishing, fly or other wise, for bass always leads you to largemouth stuff.
