But, at its core, even with an advanced form such as European nymphing, we're dealing with the same core: A natural-appearing lure, or bait, being presented in a way that makes it look like it belongs.

I'm conveniently dropping the bobber part of his comment because I think that's a lightening rod. I know when I went out with my brother in law recently and he handed me an egg sack for stockies, I treated them no differently than I would if I were trying to high stick a heavy nymph.. Tight leader, through a pocket, and feel for the take.

The difference is that you just have to wait for them to nosh those eggs a few versus a subtle sip of the nymph. I thought it'd be great training for me, if I were motivated to learn, to identify takes and fish vs objects.
