I get what you are saying Jay. But the point(s) that I was trying to make is that, the last time I looked this was not a political or immigration forum. The point Capt Matt's was trying to put across did not need that comment. And that is a problem when people that are in the service industry making those types of comments when He/They clearly live of just that, providing a service, especially in Florida where there are a lot of immigrants legal or not that may need is services.

Also, I have an issue with people that forget that they are immigrants or a product of, themselves and become so self-riches to the point where the condemn that which they are. That is where my comment of "Native" comes into play.

Let me give you a brief history of me. I am Mexican and Italian. On my fathers side I am Arab mixed with Spanish and then in the new world mixed with Mexican Indian. My mother is 2nd generation Mexican Italian. I was born in Monterrey N.L. Mexico. But I am both a US, Mexican and Italian, Mexican by birth, US citizen by parent (my dad is also a US citizen), I am also an Italian by right of parent on my mother's side.

Growing up here and there I noticed many things and I have also learned not to be biased and more important not to me a hypocrite with my beliefs, opinions and or views of my self or others. I have seen the "Americentric", (my word), way of seeing things.

Examples. Song, "I am Proud to be an American", Presidents use "God bless America!" And people in general use I am an American.

The last time I checked the Geography books there are three continents that are the Americas, North, Central and South America. If I am from any one of those continents I am still an American. But yet US Citizens take ownership of the word, category or definition and make it as yours.

Any way I have gone on and on but the bottom line is, THIS IS A FISHING FORUM and I if I want to discuss politics and or any other subject I will go to forums or places where that goes on. Capt. Matt, nothing against you, and I am not putting words in your mouth. He was not discussing politics. Again, it was just an unnecessary comment and I am plainly making a few points, in reference to the comment itself.

See it or not my way.

Lets just stick to fishing talk! Tight lines!

Mario
