I'm not a fan of Larry Dahlberg, 'cause he's an arrogant @$$, but the one thing he said that I like:

4 phases of a fisherman:

First, you just want to catch them,

Then, you want to catch a limit,

Next, you want to catch a monster,

And finally, you want to catch them the way that you want to catch them.

It takes a lot of homework to learn about the fish you chase. I am at that place in my fishing where I want to catch them when and how I want to catch them. I enjoy developing my own methods and tossing stuff at them that the streamside "experts" might roll their eyes at. I always have a reason for casting what may at times seem zanny. All I can say is...I don't often smell the skunk. 'Cause when the "experts" say it's just a bad day and they ain't biting...I find a way! They are not always on fire, but they are always biting.
