I'd describe myself as self taught (though I've read a lot of books, mags, etc). Maybe being self taught isn't so great, though: I've never become a great caster and can catch only bass but not trout on streamers for some reason. So, I fish quite a lot with nymphs, though the young lions do a lot better than I do and tie on a dry fly whenever I think they'll work, esp during a hatch. I am not one to fish underwater when they're rising. So, if you ever see a scruffily dressed (old green work shirt, often a no logo cap, and stained old olive fishing vest) old 60-year-old plodding along where he hopes to have some water to himself, it might be me. The giveaway might be afterwards (in the evening) when I sit on the tailgate of my new Ranger drinking a cold beer before heading home. I guess I'm just glad to still be on the water.
