i had a thought about some of the streams with natural reproduction of trout. the numbers of wild fish are not significant enough to produce a class a wild trout fishery. could we improve the stream in the most pristine of areas? how?

would we create deep pools or more holding water?

would we use more in stream habitat?

what would we do to create a flourishing fish population?

what would we do to creat more food for the fish?

also should we?

these trout have been here and survived for hundreds of thousands years. but....if we did the wild trout populations in pa could and would be unmatched. i belive if we had a brook trout fishery like the state had in the late 1800's and early 1900's we would be a mecca for trout fishing.

but what we have is also great. hate to see it ruined.
