Not important, but the "United States" is more formally known as the "United States of America" and it would be rather cumbersome to say "I'm proud to be an United States of American..." or even "God Bless the United States of America." When people say and hear "American," they understand and mean a citizen of the United States of America, not a citizen of any country that is in either continent of North America or South America. In other words, if you are a citizen of the U. S. of A., then you are properly called an American, and if you are not, but live on one of the two "Americas" then you are perhaps Mexican, Canadian, Panamanian, Venezuelan, Brazilian, etc.
