

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : Do you consider it ethical to advertise small streams?

Re: Do you consider it ethical to advertise small streams?

Author: : jayL

Date: : 2010/9/23 20:30:07

URL:

Quote:

JackM wrote:

When this topic comes up, I always say, and I think it bears repeating, that people do not get upset at the mention of stream or small streams in general, but they get upset when their special stream is mentioned. Now, there are a few sanctimonious exceptions, but that does not create a social norm.

My personal experience is different.

I know of some "under the radar" streams that I will never visit again, and I refuse to broadcast their names or locations. In Montana, I can think of three that I don't share publicly, and I highly doubt I'll ever bother with them again. I posted photos of the one stream in my report, and it was the only location that I chose not to name. I was not asked to keep quiet. There are also a few in New England. I have shared the names and locations of all of them via PM and in person.

It's just not right to name them IMO.