

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : Do you consider it ethical to advertise small streams?

Re: Do you consider it ethical to advertise small streams?

Author: : jayL

Date: : 2010/9/23 21:03:58

URL:

I understand that there are differing opinions over what qualifies, but there are many situations where there is nearly unanimous agreement. Like everything, it's not boolean. We'll just have to see what happens in individual situations, like always.

But what I do hope is accomplished, is that we can see where the concern for posting sensitive details comes from.

I don't name the streams because they are special due to the fact that they are not heavily used, or a "name" stream. I enjoy those types of streams an awful lot, as do many others. I think it's good to preserve that experience for those that "need" it. As you know, those of us that do will find it as long as it exists. Sharing everything, or spreading the pressure, robs those of us of that opportunity... whether we cross paths with another angler or not. I enjoy that there are still highly productive places that require a little guesswork. I think it's ok to leave that relatively small selection of streams off the glowing PAFF screens, and work to ensure it when necessary.