

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : What Constitues A Catch

Re: What Constitues A Catch

Author: : live2fish

Date: : 2006/12/4 20:29:44

URL:

I don't use a net, but it is considered caught if it's close enough to net.

I also keep count of the fish I catch, no matter what they are. My wife likes to know how I did. So I give her the numbers and type of fish caught. When trout fishing I do have a note book that I keep a record of the day and number caught. That way I can tell how I did against prior years, or even the day before. But even with all that counting going on it is mainly for myself. Although I will admit that after about seven or eight fish I start losing count.

But I do take time out to notice whats going on around me. Like the time I saw two snapping turtles in the creek in front of me. Wasn't sure what they were until they moved apart a little. Or the raccoons on the far bank one morning at sun up.

But even with all that counting going on it is mainly for myself