For me, fly fishing on a lake for largemouth bass is a hazy state of mind. It's a slowed-down, relaxed process: trout fishing on ludes.

If trout is Izaak Walton then bass is Huckleberry Finn. If trout is Shubert then bass is Grateful Dead.

My favorite method is to wet wade in lily pads working the edges and pockets with popping bugs. I cast let the bug settle for awhile. Give it a tiny twitch and WHAM! That's all it usually takes. Sometimes it may take more than one twitch. At times, it can be difficult pulling them out of the pads if they bury themselves. That's where the wet wading comes in handy. I've actually gone diving for wrapped-up bass before. On a hazy, hot summer evening it's cool thing to do. 😊
