Nice. Pics dont show many anglers from your outing.

Steel are funny to me.

There are times when I am convinced you can throw nearly anything to them and they will take when they are fresh from the lake.

Have also fished tougher days where I fished a small run and camped out over a half dozen fish or so and drifted over them 50 times before getting an eat. Why not the 49th time? They seemed like the identical drift to me with similar if not the same flies.

Then there are the really low and clear times; moreso earlier in the season that presents a real challenge. Fish are under pressure and get thrown at for days in a row and spook easy- at least for me.

Agree- Walnut is a hot mess.
