TomG is right , the MSDS at the worksite or shop where the employees have access to the information of what they are exposed to while at work "Material Safety Data Sheet" legally must contain the information to anything the employees might come into contact with while on the Job and it's an OSHA regulation. I don't ever remember anything about "trade secrets" entering into this area and i was through this whole thing in the Steel Industry. I started in 1974 and was through the asbestos issue which subsequently gave rise to OSHA creating the MSDS regulations.
