Ginky,

The description makes it sound like they made these rods specifically for the B.A.S.S. tourneys (or events that use those rules)

"both rods measure 7'11", which slides them just under the strict bass tournament rules for rod length.

Additionally, both rods are sold with custom bass taper flylines and a travel case for protection"

I wonder about the need for the special flyline. Is that because the rod doesn't load well and you need a heavy front taper? Dunno, but this whole concept strikes me as a bunch of hoey for the typical flyfisher who just wants to catch a few.
