I don't really don't plan on being in a bass tourney even though I own a boat but it would be nice to see how I would do compared to the spin fisherman. Maybe this rod will help change the rules so we can test out our skills. Despite what sage said about the rod I am going to cast it first to form my opinion. I don't think you need that extra foot for casting and a drag free drift is not really important in bass fishing so the extra foot is not really needed. Without even casting it what I see with this rod is a rod that from the line on up is designed to (cast big wind resistant bass flies with ease) When they were designing this rod they weren't thinking out of the box and did something no other rod designer has done they were thinking like a bass fisherman not like a trout fisherman that likes to fish for bass..... I hope this helps the other rod companys to also start thinking out of the box....

Ginky I like the video but you can't see the casting really well but I plan on going to cast one myself today and I will tell you how it goes
