I was river fishin once with big spinning gear, heaving these lures way out there at night fishin for walleye. As the line came up (lure still in the water), looked like a leaf on there. Reached out and grabbed it, and it was furry! A bat had hit the line in the air, tangled itself, then got drowned.

Of course, I stopped, put it down, and pulled the bat off before trying to reel in further, by which time the lure had snagged up good, I lost half my line, and was pretty much done fishin for the night. Luckily, my gf at the time was with me, so I wasn't left without something to do. :O
