The study you referred to was on unstocked streams.

Kish Creek and Bald Eagle Creek downstream from Spring Creek are both stocked streams. And they are both very heavily fished.

On Kish Creek, I've seen creels full, with a mix of stockies and wild browns, which the local people refer to as "holdovers."

On Bald Eagle I ran into 2 guys who both had their limits, 5 fish apiece on stringers. Even in Sept and Oct. I see people fishing down here. One day in August I was fishing the junction pool and a flyfisher showed me the 3 trout he had in his creel. All 3 were wild browns.

A betting man would pick these two streams as prime places to increase wild brown trout populations through management changes.
