Different strokes, and all that.

Everyone's said try before you buy, and they're right. Even better if you can try on the water (which DOES change the dynamics), plus try with the line you plan to use (if you can).

Its not all about heroic distance throws in the parking lot, most of the fishing you do will be in a vastly different style, remember to check that out as well as your ability to fling 90' of line.

I own one Orvis rod, a full flex ultralight affair. I love it, and it fits my style perfectly. I wouldn't change anything about. Most people would probably NOT find it nearly as sublime as I.
