I own a few Orvis rods, and have never had one fail for lack of backbone. And I push rods to the breaking point.

To clarify, I don't mean they actually break. I mean they lack power. When I try to get the line speed up, the rods just don't got it in em.

I never lay out that much line. Most of my fishing is mountain streams with lots of cover and canopy.

I rarely lay out much line either. But its the cover/canopy situations where I wanna throw a tight loop with a short stroke. In the open, they're alright.
