The key to night fishing is to pick out 2 or 3 big runs that hold large trout and work them methodically with large bulky streamers that push a lot of water.-great advice-i mentioned on here before trout will have feeding periods at night where the river suddenly turns on and it's "yeah baby" and then get switched off.

so like the man said keep working the places you know will hold big ones .Usually it happens when they move up from the deeper holding water.

.I have found the same is true river fishing for reds day or night-learn the ambush points and have confidence if there is a feed,thats where it will be-on big rivers like the Missouri or the Halifax there will be a lot of dink water and few "hot spots".Learn them.lol
