I am all about "for profit" wastewater treatment plants. I suspect most now are public works. Just goes to show again how we are getting ahead of ourselves by having to use our sewage treatment plants to process frac water. All frac water should be processed at a plant designated for frac water only! Then instead of dumping the treated water back into our water supply the gas companies could come back and pick it up to use again. If it is safe enough to dump back into our water supply it surely can be used over in the drilling process right?

Two years ago someone should have stood up and asked these mindless questions like. How do we treat the water? Do we have enough facilities to treat the water? If we use our existing facilities can they treat the water properly, and won't the treated water be put back in our water supply? Nope, instead they said go ahead and drill we will figure out the rest as we go along. Mind blowing!!!!!!!
