midnight,

I totally agree with what you said. Yes, two of the most important things that make a good flyfishermen is knowing where to be and when to be there. I'd rank those two factors higher than any other skill a flyfisherman can achieve. The competitions do take that away. And are the heavy nymphs so popular only cause you can't use shot?

Nonetheless, I'm still interested in their techniques and curious about being a spectator. No, I've never been to one to see it in person, only read the stories and rankings and watched the video's of the techniques and so forth.
