Call your local conservation officer and see if this is known. I've found this to be a great source about lesser known streams. In order to determine if they are wild, you might also consider taking one for the team and undertaking the ph-so-horrible task of "seeing for yourself". It's a tough job, but someone's gotta do it. I'd imagine a size 16 pheasant tail would be a good tool to use. If you're gonna lose sleep over it, just wait until after the spawn, so as not to disturb them badly.

Good find!
