I would say the most important thing is letting someone know where you are and when you will return. If your plan changes, call (if you can) and let someone know. Also, in your vehicle, you can leave a note as to where you plan to travel. That would give rescuers a direction in which to search.

I think this is THE best way to keep safe. The fact of the matter is that in PA, you are rarely if ever more than a couple miles from a road. Usually much less. If you are able to walk out of the woods, you will. If you are not, someone needs to know where you are to be able to find you.

Knife, *lighter, map, water, a bite to eat, dress accordingly and let someone know all the areas you are likely to be. If you have a cell phone, take it and make sure it is charged.

*If my life depended on it, I would rather have one Bic lighter than 50 boxes of matches. Check to make sure the lighter works ahead of time of course.
