YEP!!! That's what i mean when i say there may be a huge hatch of duns for several days and then , the adults coming back to mate may be sporadic but enough to ensure that some eggs make it. The reverse is possible too , in fact i've seen it , the Cahill hatch is often slow/sporadic over several days and then there's a huge spinnerfall. Have you ever noticed that different species of spinners do a different "mating dance" than others? Some do the up and down dance and some do the back and forth. LOL figure that one out.
