That's Becker as he races to be the first to PM you.

Curious, then, what's your take? I know you'll happily fish the way it was meant to be used, so what's got you down on it?

Most people who own them seem to praise them, I knew I was odd man out going into this, so my opinion isn't very valid (or, less than usual).

I don't see where it deserves the rave reviews. It performs its intended duties well, but I don't fish that way too often, and I almost never set out to fish that method exclusively.

I just wasn't too impressed with how it does other things, and I don't see myself committing to fishing it too often for that reason. Multiple people have told me that it does general duty well, but not with my stroke, at least not yet. I am a believer that we can adapt to the rod, rather than the other way around, so maybe I'll take a shining to it.

I am probably going to give it a shot on a few trips this spring to see how it goes... unless I get knocked over with an offer I can't refuse.

Factor in that I have two 9' 5wts that I am going to request get buried with me when I die, and the streamflex won't get all that much use.
