I'd think that a good teacher would be able to identify ways to help you with that, to say nothing of trying to learn with your opposite arm.

Honestly, what's holding you back from trying? The worst that could happen is you won't be very good at it, but still better than stayign home and not boterhing.

Plus, maybe there'd be benefits in having the will, drive, and regular use of your arm.

Project Healing Waters is probably a great start, to find a forum out there about some of the stuff going on and seeing if you can take advantage of their contacts to find someone who can help teach.

Good luck, have fun.
