I carry Xink and use it occasionally. A fly coated with Xink doesn't hold any air bubbles. There are times I think the air bubbles are important as either an attractor or maybe imitating gas bubbles of an emerger. I have had a guide suggest that I use desiccant on nymphs to promote bubbles. In addition the Xink can tend to mat up some of the fibers which reduces the appearance of action of the fly. I'd be interested in others thoughts on the subject.

BTW Gfen, I think it's silicon based. Xink, that is.
