Not to change the true nature of this thread but just an fyi. Went out this morning to a regular spot. Used a #16 bead head hares ear with the xink. I watched the fly's sink rate (No aviation pun intended for you pilots out there) and noticed that it did sink faster however it still needed an extra umph to get it down there in the moving water. I believe i am going to have to get used to casting with shot on my tippet.

I didn't get a nibble yet as i was walking out i noticed some spin guys with some decent fish. Aggravating yes, but i wouldn't have it any other way. When i do catch that first trout it'll be all worth it.
