

Subject: : Beginner Forum

Topic: : Anyone use xink? (liquid Fly sink)

Re: Anyone use xink? (liquid Fly sink)

Author: : Heritage-Angler

Date: : 2011/4/9 1:21:47

URL:

Yo - Something to consider...

When you're fishing with shot and an indicator, the shot has to move before the indicator can do its job. The further away from the shot the fly is, the more time it can take before that slack is taken up, and can move the shot (and then the indicator).

In the current, the fly is lighter than the shot, and may actually be downstream of the shot. Keeping the distance from the fly to the shot shorter, allows quicker detection of a strike.

Keeping the shot 6 to 8 inches away from the fly is a good compromise between quick detection, and a natural looking drift.