My most recent is the Michael Altizer book, "The Last Best Day," which I reviewed on here previously. Though it has a few problems, including some really careless proofreading errors, it is a good book that deals with fly-fishing, the author's son-father relationship, and Christianity. If you can get it for less than its $40.00 cover price, it is worth it. For those of us who have read myriad how-to books, this is a refreshing step away from those. You must take your time when reading it to fully appreciate it.
