I've had the Redington CPX for about a year now and just sent them back for repair. No leaks, but the cosmetic seam covers on the boot feet were peeling and I was afraid they would damage the seams, plus there is a hole beginning to wear in the heel. My boots are probably too big and rubbing.

Otherwise they're great, and if they send me new ones to replace these cosmetic defects I'll be pretty confident in the company. That said, if I knew I would be mailing them back (and charged $30 for repair plus the shipping to get them there) I may have gone with Simms the first time around.

I'll let you know when I get them back...
