Dave, No thanks with the cheap ferrules; I'll stay with the nickel/silver. I've been getting them for less than 30 dollars a set. Quads just have my interest for now. I'm sure I'll find a taper or two that I really like. They are definitely different than Hex rods (a little more difficult to make and a little fast than the traditional Hex). I do have to finish two Hex rods I started before spring smallmouth. They are only .010 from final taper then I received my Quad forms and never got back to finishing them. Although my Dad put in a request for an 8'8" 7wt Quad so after a get my bench clear of the Quads I started, I'll take care of his rod. So I'll end up not having my smallmouth rod probably not until next year. But I'm sure I'll make do with one of the other cane rods I have in the meantime.
