For me it's easier, and smaller.

My regular clinch is very sturdy and I almost never lose fish to broken knots.

Of course this was after a couple of years losing fish because of the pig-tail tippet because of how I poorly tied the knot.

I started doing a hard pull-test, like other mentioned, after I tied my knot; and now I just trust it.

I do use the improved version for largers flies on lighter tippets. I think it helps the knot secure into place. EX a size 6 bugger on 5x.
