All but one of their samples from active extraction sites was from nearby Dimock. Of the ones near Dimock all but one were concentrated in a small area, a line about 4 - 5 KM long. So of about 26 samples (it's hard to tell exactly how many, they don't say and you have to try to total up marks on a map and a graph) 24 seem to be concentrated in a very small geographic area.

Anyone want to bet that the water wells that were reported in the Gasland documentary is smack in the middle of the sample set?
