hehe, yeah, when they were out a few years ago it was some of I've only got like 14 years to wait till it comes around again, lol.

Actually, I know its not that long, there are many broods, and there's periodical cicadas somewhere in PA every couple of years, it's only 17 years for a given spot.

Actually Not According to Penn State Adams, Cumberland, and Franklin Counties will have them next year. Here is the website

Brood XIV in 2008 was the mother load. I drove for miles on the forest roads in central Pa with the windows down to hear that amazing buzz. I'm sure that I spent a good amount of time in the area for prior hatches but never remember anything like 2008.
