

---

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : Anybody Ever Fished A Cicada Fly?

Re: Anybody Ever Fished A Cicada Fly?

Author: : pcray1231

Date: : 2011/5/12 16:15:34

URL:

Quote:

I just spotted an article that says some states may be getting Cicada's this year

Somewhere gets them virtually every year. Each "brood" is mapped, and no 2 broods of a given type come on the same year. So, of the 17 year cycle cicadas, there are 14 broods, which means only 3 in 17 years are they absent.

But then you have 3 broods which come every 13 years. So overall, while its possible to miss a year here and there, on average there is more than 1 brood hatching in a year, somewhere at least.

This year the Smokies and much of the south got it going on. I'm heading down, tryin to move it up to late June, I can't go any earlier than that. Anyone know when the peak of the fishing time was?

2012 will have Brood I. WV and VA mountains. Maybe even a touch of SC PA!

<http://insects.ummz.lsa.umich.edu/fau...as/Periodical/BroodI.html>

2013 is the I-95 corridor. Chance for them on Valley Creek?

<http://insects.ummz.lsa.umich.edu/fau...s/Periodical/BroodII.html>

Next main hatch here in PA, though, isn't until 2021.

<http://insects.ummz.lsa.umich.edu/fau...as/Periodical/BroodX.html>

And the central PA extravaganza, like the last one, in 2025. I'll be in my mid 40's. Ugh.

<http://insects.ummz.lsa.umich.edu/fau.../Periodical/BroodXIV.html>