I do not believe in man made climate change. Of course the weather will change but it varies within a standard deviation. Where were all of the hurricanes this year? Any scientist knows that;

#1 you can not extrapolate from only a few data points

#2 you can make numbers say just about anything that you want

#3 you data is only as precise as your instrumentation.

Considering that the definition of climate is long term weather patterns, and that the modern thermometer was not invented until the mid 18th century I have little faith in climactic data originating before the 1940's.
