

Subject: : Beginner Forum

Topic: : Wolly Bugger Questions

Re: Wolly Bugger Questions

Author: : IloveBrookies

Date: : 2011/7/10 21:18:32

URL:

My luck with wooly buggers is usually hit or miss...definitely won't proclaim to be an expert at all. I'll just offer my experiences:

I've had them hit on the retrieve across stream through current or stripping back in with the fly coming back towards me upstream...with and without splitshot added.

And just the other day I was able to fool a 14" fallfish that was only 10 feet away from me be slowly twitching it in front of him...and I had some splitshot about 6 inches above the fly...

So like everyone has already said, I don't think there's really a wrong way, it's just whatever way seems to work on any given day...

I've never fished one dead-drifted under an indicator though, anyone have thoughts on that?