"Fly anglers are becoming increasingly scarce on local waters, and the ones you do see tend to have gray stubble on their chins, rather than smooth baby faces."

Do you guys think this is a myth that is perpetuated, much like the quoted elitism, or do you see a fair number of younger guys on the stream?

While fly fishers tend to be a bit older than the general angling population, there are quite a few younger ones too in this elite bunch of anglers..... 😊
