I have noticed a handful or more of young fly anglers joining our community. The thought occurred to me that it would be great if you guys wanted some assistance from more experienced anglers if we could set aside some time to cater to your interests.

For you young folks under say 18, you should consider asking your Dad or Mom or Uncle or Aunt to take you to the Jamboree we have every spring in Central PA. You could use some of the generous folks here to teach your chaperone how to fly fish and how to help you get out more often to perfect your skills.

The Jamboree is a weekend camping trip we take every spring on what I believe to be the most fertile streams in all of Pennsylvania. Several "minijams" are organized also throughout the year.

If you are under 18, but have a parent or relative that would take you along on one of these events, you might get a unique opportunity to get personal assistance from one of the many "experts" that populate our sport and this message board.

So, what I'm saying is you young folks who see these organized get-togethers shouldn't hesitate to find an adult who will take you and make arrangements and let others know you are coming. I am absolutely certain that one or more attendees will take you and your guardian "under their wing" and make sure the outing is worthwhile for both you and your parent/guardian.

Just sayin', is all.
