

---

Subject: : Tips and Tricks

Topic: : Leaders for Nymphing

Re: Leaders for Nymphing

Author: : wetnet

Date: : 2011/7/24 12:44:18

URL:

Very good! I do not use furred leaders but I'm seeing it now and also I'm amazed about the creativity used in fly fishing. There are so many situations where you need to change things up and finding efficient ways to change from fast to slow, shallow to deep, and dry to wet or nymph, the less time you spend on the bank re-rigging means more time fishing.

Thanks for the explanation. Might have to get some furred leaders even though I usually just nymph because it's hopper season.

My son shared a story today about an ant. He floated an ant and a little trout came up from out of no where from deep in a pool and just wriggled so excited and looked at it. My son could see it the whole time and then it circled and came up under that ant and leaped clear out of the water. My son set when it went back down and ended up with no fish. He was surprised he missed it.

I told him even fish miss once in awhile.

So with all of our techniques, practice and high tech equipment we will always have one very good excuse.

