

Subject: : Fly Tying

Topic: : Tying Cockpit

Re: Tying Cockpit

Author: : MKern

Date: : 2008/1/11 8:04:23

URL:

yea who,
don't take what was said too seriously. Although, I think most of us don't keep fish, especially wild ones. I would also think that everyone on this board is okay with you taking stocked fish.

The problem is that there are people, believe it or not, that come here with the main goal of finding out other's favorite "secret" wild trout streams because they are too lazy to find there own. Then they clean out the fish in the creek only to be wrapped in foil and shoved to the back of the freezer. A lot of people take offense to new guys on the forum how start asking questions about wild fish, especially with the intent to consume.

If you want to know the difference between stocked and wild. Wild's flesh is more salmon like, like coho or sockeye.

If you want to taste it, catch a stockie who has been in the water for some time, we'll say catch in sept. but was stocked in march. The meat should have been transformed by then.

I personally would kill that fish, because of its ability to survive and possible spawn and create wild trout, but it is definately better than taking a wild fish (in my oppinion).